The REU Home Performance Program (HPP) offers eligible customers an opportunity to have their home's energy performance evaluated using diagnostic equipment including blower door tester, duct pressure tester, and infrared cameras to evaluate the home's thermal envelope and overall energy efficiency. Home retrofit measures may include: blown-in insulation, air tight ceiling can lights, HVAC tune up (replacement when necessary), duct sealing (replacement when necessary), among other measures and technologies. There is no cost to customers who are selected to participate in the HPP program. The HPP program is funded through a ARRA Federal Stimulus Program, Energy Efficiency Community Block Grant.

Customers selected to participate agree to provide home access to REU staff and its agents including but not limited to energy auditors, evaluators and contractors performing HPP services and remediation. For more information about the HPP program, please contact REU at 339-7213.

Who is eligible for the HPP? Income eligible persons living in single or multi-family housing in Redding. The program is limited in scope and applicability due to budgetary constraints, however, REU will reach as many homes as possible. Applicants will be evaluated on a first-come first served basis and their respective qualification determination will be based on a combination of income level, historic energy use and existing home condition.
